It the China seas are simulated to the China seas are simulated to the China seas, but the China seas are simulated.

Great Britain is completely out-generaled by its Musco-ite rival; and at this critical time when the Indian p ssessions of the former are held only by a lavish expenditure of gold and blood far beyond their value when it is a matter of reat uncertainty how long England can maintain even this—a herculean young ampire, fresh, vigorous, and progressive, springs up n her path, making his way not through carnare or the sack of temples and pilaces; disdaining to use the prejudices of caste or the religious fanaticism of the ople to extirpate the tenants of the soil; but contering by the introduction of the arts of peace, and the social elevation of the Chinese, Tartars, and others who are found in occupation of the country. This is indeed a rival to be feared, a power before which the whole of Asia must gradually yield. To us it seems clear that Russian Siberia will soon be exended to the very contines of British India, and when their rival interests jar, then England's power in the east will be shaken from Cape Comorin to the Hima-laya mountains. It may be, as the New York Times aggests, that the entire of Asia will be given to the Muscovite, but we can hardly realize so stupendous a system. Still the Times is unquestionably correct when it fortells that Asia is to be the theater of a Russian "manifest destiny," as certainly as is America for the people of the United States. The reasons for his opinion are thus given :

"Already Russian influence predominates in Persia. Khiva "Already Russian influence predominates in Persia. Khiva and Bokara—the country improperly named on the map Independent Tartary—are under Russian rule; thus carrying the Imperial regime to the boundary of Iodia. And, as might be expected, Russian agents are bu-y among the populations of the Punjaub, Cabool, and Scinde, urging that diplomatic warfare which has had more victories over English rivalry than all the apparatus of arms. When the French and English negoti tors sought peculiar advantages in China, they found the Russian there before them, sharing not only all their gains, but acquiring, bestles, a cession of territory worch the entire commerce of the Middle Kingdom. There can be but one result to an advance so rapid. It must give Asia to the Muscovite."

Russian progress, if directed mildly as it has been done in Asia of late, must lead to astonishing results, and the time may come when the Sclavonic races of Europe and the Anglo-Americans—the representatives of widely differing governmental policies-may meet on the shores of the Pacific in the progress of their developments of civilization.
